From the Head of School

This publication is a celebration of commitment. Foremost, it acknowledges the remarkable voluntary commitments of many people who share their resources with the school. As you look through these pages, I hope that you have the same sense of optimism and appreciation that I feel. Once again, we have topped $1,000,000 in our annual campaign. Even more extraordinary is the story of our Frameworks for the Future campaign. At the end of the 2005-2006 giving period, we had raised slightly more than $39,000,000. Now, as I write this in late August, David OPC '82 and Jennifer Kurtz and the Kurtz Family Foundation have decided to give Penn Charter $3,000,000 for the new performing arts center, which the school will name for Dave's father, David L. Kurtz. To write that I am thrilled would be an understatement.

What is as remarkable to me as these dollar amounts is the broad-based participation in our voluntary efforts. More than 1,000 people have made gifts to the Frameworks for the Future campaign. That effort has been accomplished through the work of voluntary committees of dedicated individuals. Those individuals include 280 participants on the Alumni Committee and 47 members of the Parent Committee. The level of volunteer participation is unheard of in the history of fundraising here at Penn Charter. It speaks to the commitment of individuals who have benefited from a Penn Charter education and to those who have chosen to share their children with us.

From where I sit, those contributions are justified by the ongoing validity of the mission of the school and the current strength of the educational program. Summer is a great time to reflect on the past year, and I do so with gratitude and a sense of accomplishment. I am especially grateful to the school directors for the excellent leadership they give to their divisions. Across all divisions, the Year of the Performing Arts was a splendid success. I don't think anyone who was in the audience at the Kimmel Center concert in March will forget that event and the joy and talent of our student artists. The night was a dramatic representation of the breadth and involvement in the arts at Penn Charter.

The Frameworks for the Future campaign speaks to the core values of the school. Our endowment, thanks to this effort, is now approaching $50,000,000. Within that is significant new support for endowment for faculty salaries, and we have surpassed the $5,000,000 goal for new endowment for financial aid. The strength of the faculty and the diversity of the student body are two enduring qualities of the school, and both have been enthusiastically supported by donors to this campaign.

Our school respects tradition and embraces innovation and, as we strengthen our commitment to faculty and diversity, we also are moving forward with curricular innovation. In recently completed administrative planning sessions, school directors shared exciting educational plans for the fall. Staff of Columbia Teachers College conducted a workshop with Lower School faculty in June that will help us refine our reading program. The Middle School, focusing on cultural literacy and cultural competence, will feature special assemblies and establish book clubs for students as well as book discussion groups for parents. Upper School teachers have developed a mission statement that is a dynamic representation of our core values.

Physically, this is a very exciting summer for us. Work is proceeding on schedule for the renovation of the science labs within the Upper School. As I write this, workers are poised to begin the renovation of the pool area in the Activities Building as part of the overall development of the William A. Graham IV OPC '58 Athletic Center. We hope to begin construction on the squash courts in the upcoming weeks. A major goal this fall is to focus on funding for the performing arts center, building on the success we enjoyed during the Year of the Performing Arts. That new building will be a tremendous addition to this campus.

As I begin my last year at Penn Charter, I am poignantly aware of how the philanthropy of so many individuals over so many years has helped to shape this school. I extend my sincere thanks to every graduate, parent, grandparent, teacher, staff member, and friend who has chosen to support this exceptional place.

Walking the Talk

The Results of an Extraordinary Conversation

More than a decade ago, we began an extraordinary conversation. It started with a simple question: How can we make Penn Charter an even better school?

The answers have come in waves from everyone – teachers, students, parents and alumni joining in from all over the country. This is the story of that multiyear conversation and the remarkable results it has accomplished. It's a story that begins with one friend and colleague (Lew Somers OPC '44) asking another (then head of school Earl J. Ball), what Penn Charter should be doing educationally in the next century. It's a story with hundreds of heroes and heroines – Penn Charter alumni, parents, teachers, students and friends.

After posing his question to Ball, Somers and his wife, Betty, provided the school with a $2,000,000 gift to launch an intensive educational strategic planning process. While strategic planning sounds routine, the Somers gift required boldness. "I felt the school needed a lift. I don't understand how to teach," Somers said, "but I feel strongly that you can't sit still. If you're not moving, then you're going backwards." Somers said he came up with the idea of the gift "to get the program rolling. The school was able to make some significant changes right away, and that excites good people."

The resulting plan and the capital campaign to fund – FRAMEWORKS FOR THE FUTURE – focused on three essentials: the ability to hire and develop the best teachers, the ability to provide need-based scholarships to maintain a diverse student body, and the ability to provide the best places to teach and learn. The campaign would be the biggest philanthropic call to action in the school's history – $40,000,000 in new endowment and capital gifts and, during the final three years of the campaign, $3,600,000 in annual giving. Most significantly, the plan would build new endowment strength, vital to 21st century sustainability. Other than tuition, income from endowment is Penn Charter's most important revenue source, yet Penn Charter's endowment was quite small – especially for a school with such a long and thriving history. A powerful endowment would have unprecedented impact, sustaining and improving programs and facilities while taking pressure off tuition. Beyond sustainability, new endowment funds would dramatically advance the school's ability to recruit and retain the most talented teachers in an increasingly competitive climate, and it would facilitate? the enrollment of qualified students regardless of their family's ability to pay.

Almost immediately after the plan was in place, transformations in curriculum and campus got underway. Key early accomplishments included an articulated "Portrait of the Graduate," which mapped expectations for graduate outcomes and a curricular blueprint to achieve them. A $5,000,000 gift from Richard B. Fisher OPC '53 led to a state-of-the-art freestanding Middle School, which opened in 2002. In 2003, what had always been an excellent school was firing on all cylinders in new ways. During Penn Charter's accreditation that year, the visiting team from the Pennsylvania Association of Private Academic Schools & Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools took notice and reported, "William Penn Charter School has one of the clearest senses of purpose and philosophy – and consistency between that purpose and performance – of any institution that the majority of the experienced members of the evaluation team could recall having observed."

Despite significant early success and momentum, the Frameworks challenge – financing an independent school that is both excellent and socioeconomically accessible – was formidable. In 2004, with so much accomplished, it became clear that if the plan was truly to succeed, even more of the Penn Charter community would need to understand the stakes and how to help. Teachers, parents, alumni and students gathered to talk. What began as a conversation

“Exceeding the campaign’s goal is a testament to the people of Penn Charter and their gratitude for the school’s role in their lives. It’s also a testament to Earl Ball’s vibrant leadership.”

WILL CARR JR. OPC '69,
CLERK OF PENN CHARTER’S OVERSEERS

years before about making Penn Charter a better school became a reinvigorated conversation about doing something for a better world. As Penn Charter parent Cecelia Grace said, "People just want a better world. They're clamoring for it." In giving to ensure that "Penn Charter can always compete for the best teaching minds," as one pair of parent donors put it or to ensure more "happily ever afters" for students in need of tuition assistance, Frameworks donors shared the belief that by strengthening Penn Charter they could contribute to strengthen the world. What could make a bigger difference in the world, after all, than helping young people become tolerant, caring, intelligent, creative and responsible people?

Never very far from this conversation about the greater good was also a very personal conversation about people donors loved, respected and admired. Whether giving to faculty and scholarship endowment or to the bricks and mortar of innovative classrooms, laboratories, athletic and arts facilities, Frameworks donors invariably did so in honor of revered and beloved classmates, mentors, fathers, mothers, brothers and friends. One such gift was among the last of the campaign. With the encouragement and active participation of Jennifer and David Kurtz OPC '82, the Kurtz Family Foundation made the lead gift of $3,000,000 to the new performing arts center. The center will be named for Dave's father, broadcast pioneer David L. Kurtz. A new performing arts center had been a cornerstone of the campaign. Now it would be a reality.

By early summer, the collective energy and resources of the Penn Charter community – including 1,297 campaign donors – propelled FRAMEWORKS FOR THE FUTURE past its ambitious goal of $40,000,000 to a grand total of $47,000,000. Will Carr Jr. OPC '69, clerk of Penn Charter's Overseers said, "There is a difference between just getting the money in and donors who want to give you their treasure. Exceeding the campaign's goal is a testament to the people of Penn Charter and their gratitude for the school's role in their lives. It's also a testament to Earl Ball's vibrant leadership." Ball's guidance of the campaign capped a 31-year legacy of school milestones, including a successful move to coeducation, a more socioeconomically, religiously and racially diverse community, and new strength in the visual arts and music.

One of the wonderful things Ball did, according to Carr, was to build superb programs, prove how well they worked and then ask donors to support and add to them. "Potential donors not only saw these fabulous programs at work but met the people who had designed them and could explain why they worked and what made them special." Carr believes this is Ball's real legacy – the people he recruited. "You can't have a superb school without a superb faculty," Carr said. "Penn Charter's faculty and administrators are the underlying reason for the campaign's spectacular success." Carr pointed to Darryl Ford, Ball's successor as head of school, as a great example of this strength. "Darryl has been part of creating what Penn Charter is today," says Will. "He's got a head start because he helped create a product he loves. And now with the success of the campaign, the school is positioned beautifully for Darryl to execute his own vision."

Carr said he thinks the changes Penn Charter has undergone over the last three decades enabled the campaign's historic philanthropic success.

"Penn Charter is a different place than it was 30 years ago," he said, recalling that he joined the board about the time Ball became head. "Early on, Earl would give speeches about William Penn's original vision for the school of educating rich and poor, boys and girls, and all races. At the time it was a bit rhetorical but that vision has come to fruition."

A conversation that began between two friends ends in a resounding crescendo of many voices and, most importantly, in results that will walk the talk for years to come.

ENDOWMENT MATHEMATICS

This Frameworks campaign has been critical to Penn Charter's future because of its emphasis on endowment. Endowments begin with gifts from donors. (Penn Charter traces its endowment to a gift of property valued at 300 pounds sterling given by William Penn's friend Samuel Carpenter.) Those gifts are then invested. The revenue earned on those investments contributes to a school's operating budget each year to greater and lesser degrees depending on the level of earnings. Higher earnings mean schools can do more for their students and teachers without increasing tuition proportionately. Every dollar Penn Charter earns from its endowment puts less pressure on tuition.

Penn Charter did not focus on raising money for endowment until 20 to 25 years ago and, despite our 300-year history, many boarding and day schools far younger than Penn Charter have endowments 10 times as large. That has changed. With the completion of the campaign, the un-audited figure for endowment as of June 30, 2007 was $XX,XXX,000, up from $27,800,000 in 2003 when the campaign prepared to enter its public phase. A combination of $XX,X00,000 in campaign gifts to the endowment and exceptional investment returns account for this extraordinary growth. Penn Charter's endowment is now the highest of its peers in the InterAcademic League [Verify] and above the mean among 40 national peers in a benchmark group. [verify]

Gifts to the endowment during this campaign have and will make a difference to Penn Charter for the new century and beyond.

A Triumvirate of Interrelated Goals

Victory Three Times Over

At Penn Charter, which comes first: recruiting and retaining excellent teachers, giving those teachers the tools they need to be effective, or making sure families of all backgrounds can afford this excellent education? Like the chicken and egg conundrum, the answer is we can't have one without the others. Each priority endlessly turns on and sustains the others. That fact is not lost on the 1,297 donors whose appreciation for this unique synergy has ensured that the school doesn't have to choose one excellence over another.

The Impact of the Frameworks for the Future Campaign

Endowment to Hire and Develop the Best Teachers

Goal: $15,000,000

Raised: $10,709,543

Where do great teachers come from? Are they born or made? Penn Charter has operated on the belief that great teachers are called to teach. We seek out the special ones, the gifted ones -- the ones graduates will remember for a lifetime. There is no question that teachers choose Penn Charter for compensation beyond salary, but the campaign's infusion of faculty endowment ensures that talented teachers can afford to make that choice.

"So much of the importance of this fund-raising campaign has been about decently compensating our remarkable faculty," said Will Carr Jr. OPC '69, clerk of Overseers. The Frameworks for the Future campaign has added $28,369,367 to endowment earmarked for faculty salaries and professional development. Donors have created new endowed funds for teaching in English, foreign language,

Penn Charter is an extraordinary institution that doesn't leave well enough alone; it keeps getting better. It's had an exceptional series of headmasters. John Flagg Gummere was the right headmaster for the time. He was representative of the 1940s and '50s but not the change that was to come. Then Gummere retired and Wilbur Braxton was hired -- the perfect Quaker for the job. It was a time that individual rights were coming to the fore -- civil rights as well as the anti-war movement. Then Earl Ball comes -- our first non-Quaker. He was just an amazing headmaster. One of his many accomplishments was managing to take the school to coeducation. That was a much harder job than anyone could have imagined. I was around then, and it was brilliantly managed. The school is better for it.

Penn Charter increasingly relies on endowment -- gifts from friends and alumni. Look at the support the school now gets from its alumni. My family put very few restrictions on our fund because we thought the school would know best what to do with it. The idea was to make it better for the teachers, to make it possible for the school to adequately compensate its greatest resource. My family certainly appreciates Quaker education above all; it's my opinion that there is a difference and it's specific.

Class of 1956 Faculty Fund

Our class feels very strongly that the future of this nation is going to be heavily dependent on how well we educate our children. To us, the Class of '56, Penn Charter is the quintessential education for people today. And the lifeblood of this institution is its faculty. The memory the class has of its teachers is very dear to our hearts, and we owe them, as we do their successors, a debt of gratitude in preparing us for our future.

A lot has been done for the physical well-being of the school in terms of buildings and equipment. But we felt strongly that the human side of this educational enterprise that is Penn Charter is one that we want to support. We hope as a result of our contribution, the school will be able to hire and retain the highest skilled teachers, both from a personal standpoint and a technical standpoint. We want the Penn Charter faculty to be the best it absolutely can be going into the future – and we feel that selecting and maintaining a top-notch faculty will prepare the students of the future for the major challenges that we face in this nation going forward.

Class of 1959 Faculty Support Fund

This fund was a joint effort by people who went to school together at Penn Charter. We were making plans for our 25th reunion, which was in May 1984, and we thought, Why don't we try to start some sort of a fund that would help Penn Charter?

By starting an endowed fund for faculty, we could provide money that would help a young teacher do work toward a master's degree or doctorate. The vitality of the school while we were at Penn Charter was in the richness of our faculty; they fostered our interest in education and in continuing to have curiosity about what's going on in the world. We felt that, if we wanted to keep the best and the brightest at Penn Charter, we'd better find a way to help them.

From 1984 on, each year I've been sending out my "don't forget

Some of our classmates have added substantial dollars to the fund as part of the capital campaign. I try to remind folks not to forget about our fund and how important it is to the school.

Nelson Luria and Bill Chapman have been faithful supporters of this activity and faithful supporters of Penn Charter. We probably have received gifts from half of our classmates. I just happen to be a point person in this; the generosity has come from many others. We will continue to make the fund even larger by the time we reach our 50th reunion so that it may become an even more significant fund.

mathematics, science, social studies, and the visual and performing arts. They have added to existing endowed funds for teacher development, Quaker values and ethics, athletics and coaching, community service education, early childhood education, and library science.

At the start of the campaign, Penn Charter's median salary trailed select Philadelphia-area public school districts and ranked fifth among leading independent schools in the region. No longer. Frameworks donors giving gifts of all sizes have made it possible for Penn Charter to increase its average salary for all levels of teaching experience at a higher rate than most of our peer schools. The gains made now have also prepared the school for a coming teacher shortage that will intensify competition.

"When you have teachers who are willing to go the extra mile – that perfect combination of care and expectation – you turn out kids with a conscience who want to do well not only for themselves and their families but for their communities," said Tripp Davis OPC '82. "Students here have every opportunity to become the people they want to be." No one understands that better than alumni and parents, who went the extra mile in this campaign for our outstanding teachers.

Penn Charter is a wonderful school. And there's a real need for it because it trains the people who will be our leaders. The most important thing about a school is what you learn, and if you have good faculty members, you learn more. I decided to support teachers because, by providing more funds to pay teacher salaries, we will clearly get better teachers.

When I went there, there were several faculty members who were wonderful. I had a French teacher named Mr. Hodge, who was also the football coach. I broke my leg and I can remember him carrying me off the field in his arms. Then there was Mr. MacCormick, a math teacher, who was very strict and demanded a great deal. He provided the basics of the work that I would do: I got a Ph.D. from Cal Tech, and became an engineer and was interested in mathematical physics primarily. The background that he gave me was important. He was well remembered by a lot of kids. My biology teacher, Henry Evans – everyone called him Bugs when I was there – he used to take some of us on trips to the beach or camping overnight and things of that sort, and during a period when I was maybe 14 or 15 years old, I would ask him questions about the world. We were riding together in his 1930 Ford coupe with a rumble seat, and I would ask him my questions and he would answer. How did the world get started? How will it end? Is God real? My parents were separated by that time, and I didn't have that kind of a relationship with my father to ask those questions, so asking someone I respected as a teacher was the next best thing. I considered him almost like a father.

Cryer Fund for Teaching Excellence

Because of my appreciation of Penn Charter's faculty, I wanted to do something to help maintain teaching excellence in the school. Albert Linton had a huge impact on what I decided to do in college and with my life, which was very mathematical and numbers oriented. He had tremendous clarity of thought and communication. He communicated to the class – both graphically on the blackboard and in the way he spoke -- that just made mathematics very easy for me to comprehend and appreciate, and I wanted to spend my time in that field. For me, he brought the subject to life. It resonated for me. A teacher who can do that in any subject can help a student find their area of excellence. It's sort of like a sculptor who can see a sculpture in a piece of stone and bring it to life. I think a teacher can do that with a student. And Mr.

Linton did it for me – and Mr. Braxton, who was the physics teacher.

I've listened to classmates talk about other teachers who had an impact on them similar to the impact that Mr. Linton had on me. It depends on what resonates. What's the God-given talent that each of us has? For one it might be music, for another science, for another athletics. No matter what your talent at Penn Charter, there's probably somebody there who can help you develop that talent.

I hope that great teachers will feel that they are recognized and rewarded – and stay at Penn Charter. I feel that I'm part of the Penn Charter community even though I'm out in California, and I want to do my part in proportion to my ability to help.

Scholarship Endowment to Make a Penn Charter Education Accessible to a Diverse Socioeconomic Student Body

Goal: $5,000,000
Raised: $7,595,150

Philanthropy is defined as “affection for mankind.” Nowhere in this campaign has such affection been more apparent than in our donors’ desire to expand the level and number of scholarships available to students. Affection for classmates and family, affection for the dazzling potential that lies within each young person, affection for the way uniquely different personalities, backgrounds and experiences can enliven a community drove donors to grow the Penn Charter scholarship endowment. As Mary Ortale Malitas said in helping to establish a scholarship in honor of her brother Peter K. Ortale OPC ‘83, “scholarship funds are an investment in goodness, intellect and positive personal growth.”

Keeping the doors open to a diverse socioeconomic student body is central to Penn Charter’s mission. But the challenge in doing so has intensified as more and more families need financial aid. Over the last decade, the need-based aid portion of the school’s budget has doubled. Penn Charter already awards financial aid to a higher percentage of our students than our peer schools. Yet our average award of 59 percent [verify] of tuition puts us seventh from the bottom in a group of 40 of representative peers.

Until now, accepted candidates have been offered an average of 80 percent of demonstrated need. Each year the school loses impressive applicants to other schools that offer financial aid closer to a family’s need. That will change thanks to the $7,595,150 in new scholarship money given in the Frameworks campaign. Within the next three years, new scholarship endowment will allow us to systematically increase the amount of aid offered to as much as 90

I think what drives these class gifts and our gift is gratitude for the experience we had at Penn Charter – the growth and fun and education that we had there. I think we all feel that the teachers really made the difference for us – it wasn’t the bricks or mortar or fields. It was the teachers who gave us the experience and the discipline to set us up for the rest of our lives. The gifts reflect our desire to make sure the school has adequate funding to attract that same caliber of teacher. And there’s no question that we all value the diversity of students. A high level of faculty and a diverse student body – these are iconic. A school that has these attributes is going to go on forever.

We accelerated our 50th reunion gift so we could participate in the campaign and the continuation of the grand tradition of education at Old Penn Charter. We recognize we’re not doing the whole thing but we’re making our contribution.

Our class would not have been as great without Kenny Caldwell. Literally the Quaker in our class, he was our school mascot; he befriended everyone and had the enthusiasm to rally us.

I remember running into Kenny about a week before he passed away. The last time I saw him was just like the first time: He had a wide grin on his face, full of life, happy and content with where he was in life.

Graham E. Michener OPC '89 is an executive recruiter for Russell Reynolds Associates who spearheaded the Kenny Caldwell OPC '89 Memorial Scholarship Fund to honor his classmate who died in the World Trade Center on Sept. 11, 2001.

It really struck a cord with me.

Kenny came from a different environment than I was exposed to, and he brought so much more to the class than the average student; he brought diversity to our class in many ways. I felt like it was the right thing to do for our school to establish a scholarship in memory of Kenny to bring other Kenny Caldwells into the Penn Charter community. We hope that through this scholarship, we'll be able to achieve this goal.

The scholarship fund will enable students who normally would not think of Penn Charter as an option to clear that hurdle and to become part of a community that would not only benefit their lives but allow them to benefit the lives of others.

Educational Improvement Credit

I have three sons who are graduates, so Penn Charter has been very important in the upbringing of our children. As a parent, I can see it has stood them in good stead for their careers, both personally and professionally, really. And it's a very good cause. Bonnie and I have said that one of the things that stands out about the school is its diversity. Of course, it's true that many people can't afford Penn Charter, so if we can help them out, so much the better. The parents who can't afford to send their children there bring their diversity, whether it be racial or cultural or whatever. They give the school real depth.

Our EITC gift was a no-brainer because it ultimately only cost us 10 percent of our gift because of the state's tax credit. Why wouldn't I do it? It just makes a lot of sense. The scholarship program brings young people who might not otherwise have a chance to grow and develop and blossom, and that's important for the city, the region and the school.

Paul C. Zieger is president of Zieger and Sons, Inc., a flower wholesaler. Zieger and Sons designated tax dollars to benefit scholarship at Penn Charter as part of the Educational Improvement Tax Credit program.

percent of a family's need. An additional $1,000,000 in new endowment has been earmarked for students new to independent education to prepare and support them for academic success. These funds will be used for transition programs in the summer prior to matriculation, yearlong tutoring and counseling, and financial assistance with books and computers.

Beyond maintaining and enhancing the vibrancy of Penn Charter's student body, our new and improved scholarship endowment will free the school's operating budget to be used for other program enhancements and priorities.

Imagine hundreds of savings accounts each designated to make sure resources are always available to bring a variety of students to the Penn Charter community. This is precisely what scholarship donors did in great numbers during this campaign. Joy Quill established a fund for needy Asian students. The Ortale family for scholar-athletes. The Kurz family for needy Upper School students and the Evans family for needy Lower School students. Speaking on behalf of the Class of 1970, Tom Driscoll OPC '70 recalled Charlie Long, one of the classmates in whose honor a class scholarship has been established, "I think it would be wonderful if every Penn Charter class has a Charlie. We only got him because somebody previous to us had set up a fund." Similarly, Graham Michener OPC '89 says of his classmate Kenny Caldwell in whose honor he established a scholarship, "Our class would not have been as great without him. I just felt like it was the right thing to do for our school to put something together in memory of Kenny to bring other Kenny Caldwells into the Penn Charter community."

Earl J. Ball III Scholarship Fund

I think any school that cares so much about the students—and the students' overall development over anything else—is a school that should be taken care of.

Earl had been around for so long and had such an impact on so many children that I felt it was really important to recognize the strength and leadership that he's shown all these years. Specifically, the goal of a fund like this is to give kids a chance, by giving the spirit of what Earl is all about. His strength and consistency and constancy and leadership to the school are the kind of attributes that any student would strive for.

Jeff Lotman OPC '80, CEO of Global Icons, established the Earl J. Ball III Scholarship Fund to support worthy students.

This scholarship gives an opportunity to students who couldn't write a check for Penn Charter, and it contributes to the school's diversity—something that Earl cares passionately about. It was my way of recognizing his leadership and saying thank you for taking care of me and all the students who have been at Penn Charter.

Casiana Ryan Schmidt

William Ryan Scholarship Fund

I was fortunate to have been married to a truly brilliant, fun and life-loving OPC '49 man, William Hayes Ryan. Bill Ryan loved Penn Charter and always valued the education he received in this institution. His heart was filled – particularly towards the end of his life – with wonderful memories of his youth as a PC student. Penn Charter is a special school for me, too, not only because of Bill, but also because I believe in the Quaker way of education. You see, I taught in Moorestown Friends. So, today, and for the rest of my life, in Bill's memory, I would like to help an economically disadvantaged young person with academic potential receive a Penn Charter education.

In honor of her late husband, Casiana Ryan Schmidt established the William Ryan OPC '49 and Casiana Ryan Scholarship Fund.

Building the Best Places to Teach and Learn

As Will Carr OPC '69 notes in "Walking the Talk" on page XXX, rather than a build-it-and-they-will-come philosophy Penn Charter's approach to new facilities has been to develop fabulous programs and then to ask donors to build new facilities to support them. Indeed, each of the major building initiatives of the Frameworks campaign – a new middle school, Upper School renovations, athletic fields and squash center, and a new performing arts center – grows out of existing programmatic excellence.

Richard B. Fisher Middle School

With the opening of the Richard B. Fisher Middle School, Penn Charter realized a primary goal in its campus master plan – strong identity and clear separation of the three school divisions. A gift of $5,000,000,000 from Richard B. Fisher OPC '53 made the new Middle School possible. It opened in September 2002 to the cheers of students, parents and alumni. The building is faced with Wissahickon mica schist, the rock that gives Penn Charter's campus its distinctive appearance. Inside, the school house is a state-of-the-art, 45,000-square-foot facility with thirteen classrooms, three science labs, a music and drama room, and a two-story commons used for performance and assemblies – all designed to meet the specific needs of a vibrant and innovative Middle School program.

Upper School Renovations

With the Middle School settled in its own building, space to improve and renew Upper School programs in the main building increased dramatically. An upgrade to wireless technology, a new HVAC system, an elevator and handicap ramps launched these renovations. Then several enhancements for specific program spaces

The $150,000 renovation to the fitness center in Dooney Field House was completed in October 2006, and both students and faculty have been enjoying workouts there for nearly a year. The renovation, made possible by a generous gift from an anonymous donor, included an expansion of the space, the addition of a safer, rubberized floor, a new coat of paint – including a handsome PC logo on the back wall – and new free weights and Nautilus equipment.

The space is now air conditioned, an upgrade that has encouraged more people to come in and exercise. Athletic Director Paul Butler estimated that about 30 students use the fitness room each day in the summer and, during the school year, the number climbs to 70 to 80 students and faculty daily.

Jordan Studevan, a junior who uses the center to train for basketball and football, said he enjoys both the atmosphere and the range of equipment. "There's always something for someone, even if they are new to weightlifting," Studevan said. "It used to seem that it was for athletes only, but now you see more faculty, and you see students who don't participate in athletics as much."

Assistant Head of School Stephanie Judson works out in the fitness center twice a week. She said the renovations "have allowed me to exercise more effectively.

The equipment is top-of-the-line, and outside trainers are extremely impressed with our facility."

Jim Phillips, Middle School teacher and coach of boys varsity basketball, agreed. "It is ideal," he said. "Compared to other schools, some may be bigger or more dynamic, but for the number of users at our center, it is the ideal space and has all the equipment you ever need," Phillips said.

Kline and Specter Squash Center

Penn Charter has an outstanding squash program, led by my OPC classmate Geoff Shields, and it was important to me that the school enter the 21st century in terms of the squash facility.

The new squash courts are going to help recruit good squash players, entice novices to come out and play squash, allow ample practice time for the boys and the girls, and assist Penn Charter's matriculation to first-rate colleges because there are so many colleges that are looking for good squash players. Squash is one of the only sports offered at Penn Charter that is truly a lifetime sport. It's going to increase the life expectancy of Penn Charter students.

I was a remarkably mediocre athlete at Penn Charter. I earned a varsity letter in squash through a lot of hard work and good coaching from my dad and Ralph West. When I was a junior, I played on the JV team and I was paired against a skinny kid from Germantown Academy. And then when I was a senior on Penn Charter's varsity team, I was paired against that same skinny kid. I went on to Haverford College, which had no squash courts, and I didn't get much better until I went to law school and played regularly again. The skinny kid went on to Penn and played number one at Penn. He was Brian Roberts. Those two matches introduced Brian and me, and a fast friendship grew out of it. Brian was pivotal in the fund-raising for these squash courts. My law partner, Tom Kline, and his wonderful wife, Paula – parents of squash player Zac OPC '03 and Hilary OPC '97 – and my squash playing wife, Tracey, were equally instrumental with me in the lead gift.

Shanin Specter OPC '75 and Tom Kline P '97, '03, partners in the Center City law firm Kline & Specter, made lead gifts to the Kline and Specter Family Squash Center.

Earl and Pam Ball Theater

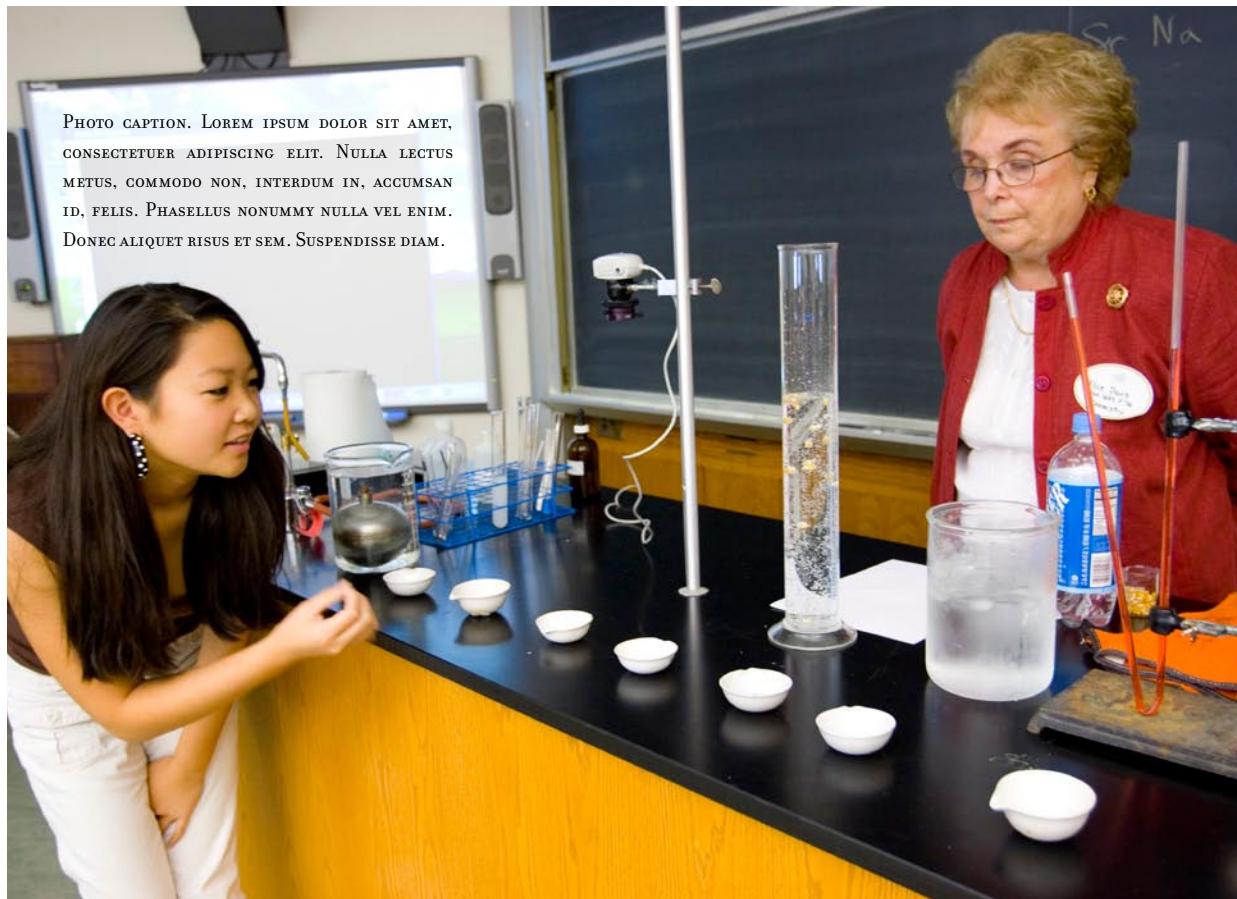

The Penn Charter Community dedicated the 2007 Community Auction to Earl and Pam Ball. We then happily donated the auction profits, $100,000, to the Ball Theater of the David L. Kurtz Performing Arts Center in recognition of Earl's tireless efforts to create this reality for our children. We felt that the capital campaign should not be supported by only the chosen few but by our community as a whole, and the Community Auction was an all-school effort – parents, overseers, faculty and students came together to make this event possible and successful – even in a driving ice storm!

We all care so much about our children and their education that it's a priority to make Penn Charter the best place it can be for our kids. Our hope is that a gift of this size will demonstrate the Community's commitment to building this Performing Arts Center and hopefully serve to inspire other people to join us in supporting it. I see our children on that stage, in plays, performing music... I see the culmination of the hard work of our arts faculty, and I see a performing space that's fitting for what our faculty and students have achieved in the arts over the past few years. I see a happy future.

Diane Bass P'14 is co-chair of the Penn Charter Community, which donated $100,000 of the proceeds from the 2007 Community Auction to the Pam and Earl Ball Theater in the new David L. Kurtz Center for the Performing Arts. The Bass family also purchased a box suite in memory of Diane's mother, Jeanette Cohn.

were made, including new Math and Writing Centers, a new computer lab – and dramatically transformed science facilities. New campaign funds have made possible enlarged, state-of-the-art science laboratory classrooms for chemistry, biology, and physics; plus a general science lab and lecture room, a greenhouse, an enhanced science library and faculty offices, plus endowment to support Upper School science education.

Athletic Fields, Facilities Renovations, Kline and Specter Squash Center

Campaign donors have provided funding for new baseball, football and lacrosse fields, and a new track. In the Activities Building, the wrestling facility and basement locker rooms have been renovated, and a renovated swimming pool features new filtration and ventilation systems, sound panels and spectator seating. Once complete, the building will be renamed the William A. Graham IV OPC '58 Athletic Center. Across the School House Lane, the new Kline and Specter Squash Center features seven international regulation squash courts and spectator seating and restores the gatehouse on the old Strawbridge property.

David L. Kurtz Center for the Performing Arts

The performing arts have flourished at Penn Charter, especially over the past 10 years and our superb arts faculty and program attract many families to the school. Due to the program's success, Penn Charter has literally outgrown its current facilities. The need for a new performing arts center has been apparent for some time and was identified as a priority by the strategic planning committee prior to the campaign. Thanks to Frameworks donors that dream will become a reality. The turning point in securing the future of the new center came toward the end of the campaign with a lead gift of $3,000,000 from the Kurtz Family Foundation. Called "the right gift at the right time" by those involved, the gift was made with the help and guidance of Jennifer and David Kurtz OPC '82. The center will be named for Dave's father, broadcast pioneer David L. Kurtz. Penn Charter hired Voith & Mactavish Architects (VMA) of Center City to design a center with a stage capable of holding both band and choir; a 650-seat theater; vocal and band practice rooms; recording facilities; and lobby art gallery. The new center will benefit not only Penn Charter but its East Falls neighborhood as well.

A beautiful campus in the city on a green expanse of 44 acres is one of Penn Charter's great distinctions. Donor gifts to facilities have helped to steward and enhance this remarkable asset.

Rosen Atrium

I love this school. I love the diversity. And I love the devotion of the teachers. The teachers really will go above and beyond with the students – all kids have to do is ask. A few years ago, I was sitting on my back porch with Rich Balderston and I said I would love to do something for the school. He said, we just happen to be starting a capital campaign. I wanted to make a contribution. At the time, my daughter was going into the Middle School – a brand new, beautiful, state-of-the-art building that the children can enjoy. And the school made sure we were part of the process. I'm sorry Ali's leaving Middle School; her experience was just wonderful.

I think it's really important when people are fortunate that they give back. I guess the more people who step forward, the more others will follow with whatever they can do.

Wendy H. Rosen, real estate agent and insurance broker, and Paul R. Rosen, an attorney with Spector Gadon & Rosen P.C., funded the Rosen Atrium in the Richard B. Fisher Middle School.

Education Improvement Tax Credit

This exciting and innovative program is an opportunity to support two values that are at the core of the Penn Charter experience: scholarship and diversity.

Participation in the Pennsylvania Educational Improvement Tax Credit program (EITC) allows corporate citizens to direct taxes from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to William Penn Charter School. EITC permits companies that pay specific Pennsylvania corporate taxes to donate up to $222,222 to Penn Charter in support of scholarship — and receive a tax credit of up to 90 percent of the donation.

For more information on the EITC program and scholarship at Penn Charter, please contact:

Frameworks for the Future

The following lists of alumni and parents are contributing volunteer time to the objectives of Frameworks for the Future, our capital campaign. The Alumni Committee has expanded exponentially this past year and now totals 318 participants. Classes celebrating special five-year reunions organized committees and made class gifts in support of the Frameworks campaign and the Annual Fund. Classes of the 2s and 7s (1997 through 1947) raised an astounding aggregate of $xxxxx. The school is enormously grateful for this extraordinary outpouring of interest and support.

Penn Charter Endowed Funds and Gifts

Penn Charter's first endowed fund was established in 1702 by Samuel Carpenter, who was appointed Overseer by William Penn in 1711. Our history of extraordinary generosity from alumni, parents and friends is evident by the evolution of our endowed funds program. Support for endowment demonstrates a commitment to ensuring the future of our school and is an opportunity for donors to create a lasting legacy. All great schools possess outstanding endowments. Funds are organized below under headings of general, faculty, scholarship, library and other. New funds are denoted by an asterisk. Donors supporting individual funds are listed below fund descriptions.

ENDOWED GENERAL FUNDS

General Endowment Fund

Gifts contributed to Penn Charter without specific limitations go into the General Endowment Fund. Those who contribute to this fund can take great satisfaction in knowing that their gifts are benefiting the school now and in the future. This fund is the most important at the school. It gives the school maximum flexibility to meet the evolving needs of the institution.

Class of 1970 Scholarship Fund

The Class of 1970 Scholarship Fund was established to honor its class president, Dr. Charles Long III (1952-2004), who died tragically. Charlie benefited from such a scholarship during his Penn Charter years. The fund further recognizes the premature passing of Dr. Chip Morgan (1952-2002). Charlie and Chip exemplified the highest standards of scholarship and sportsmanship during their years at Penn Charter and in their lives. They were guided by deep respect for the integrity of others. Each sought and heeded a call to service in their professional lives, but perhaps more importantly, each exhibited by virtue of his day-to-day interactions with his fellow man the sincere belief in the principle that the sensitivities and sensibilities of each of us are worthy of consideration, as within each one of us there is that which is divine.
